

Requesting Heather Texle's Books from a Library

Thank you for wanting to read my books through your library! Requesting books from your local library is a great way to share your favorite stories with your community and help other readers discover them. Libraries rely on patron requests to guide their purchasing decisions, so your suggestion can directly lead to a book being added to the collection. It's also a wonderful way to support authors—libraries purchase their copies, which means authors are paid for their work, while readers still get to enjoy books for free. When readers use libraries, everyone benefits: the library, the author, and the community as a whole.

When filling out the form, include as much information as possible. Helpful details often include: title, author, genre, format, and ISBN (the identification number specific to the book format that helps the librarian order the book).
